LITTLE STORIES FOR BEDTIME

Lightfoot Does the Wise Thing.

All the rest of that day the hunter with the terrible gun lay hidden in the bushes of the pasture where he had watched for Lightfoot the Deer. He left the place of safety he had and when he swam across the river. It required a lot of patience on a part of the hunter, but the hunter and plenty of patience. It seems as if hunters have more patience than any other people. But this hunter waited in vain. His round, red sun sank down the west to his bed behind the purple hills. The shadow of the stars began to twinkle. One by one the stars began to twinkle. Still the hunter waited, and still there was no sign of Lightfoot. At last it became so dark that it was useless for the hunter to remain longer. Disappointed and once more becoming angry, he tramped back to the Big River, got into his boat, and rowed across to the other side. Then he tramped home and his thoughts were very bitter. He knew that he would have shot Lightfoot had it not been for the hunter who had protected Lightfoot. He even began to suspect that this man had himself killed Lightfoot for he had been sure of it as soon as he had become rested. Lightfoot would start for the woods and Lightfoot did nothing. The hunter, in fact, the hunter had not had so much as another glimpse of Lightfoot.

The reason the hunter had been so disappointed was that Lightfoot was smart. He was smart enough to understand that the hunter had been watching him from the hunter had done it because he was a true friend. All afternoon Lightfoot had rested on a bed of soft hay in an open shed and had watched this man going about his work and taking the utmost care to do nothing to frighten him. "He not only will let no one else harm me, but he himself will not harm me," thought Lightfoot. "As long as he is near I am safe. I'll stay right around here until the hunting season is over, then I'll swim back across the Big River to my home in the dear Green Forest."

So, all afternoon Lightfoot rested and did not so much as put his nose outside that open shed. That is why the hunter got no glimpse of him. When it became dark, so dark that he knew there was no longer danger, Lightfoot got up and stepped out under the stars.

Under the stars. He was feeling quite himself again. His splendid strength had returned. He bounded lightly across the meadow and up into the brushy pasture where the hunter had been hidden. There and in the woods back of the pasture he browsed, filling his stomach. But at the first hint of the coming of another day Lightfoot turned back, and when his friend the farmer came out early in the morning to milk the cows there was Lightfoot back in the open shed. The farmer smiled. "You are as wise as you are handsome, old fellow," said he.

DECREASE IN BUILDING OPERATIONS IS NOTED

New Work Drops From 70 to 50 Millions a Week, Straus Says.

That there has been considerable falling off in building operations since November 1 throughout the country is the statement of S. W. Straus, New York banker. He declared that at the present time new construction work throughout the country is going forward at the rate of approximately $50,000,000 a week. During the months of September and October this work amounted to $70,000,000 a week, while the volume of contemplated projects remains in excess of $80,000,000 a week.

"While pressure for housing accommodations of all kinds is growing more acute, labor troubles, shortage of materials, physical limitation of the building industry and the lateness of the season," he said, "appear to preclude the possibility of greater activity at this time."

"The growing demand for new structures, both business and household, is reflected in a constant increase in rentals, and it appears that this condition will continue throughout the ensuing year."

"Gross building and construction operations in the United States show large increases over former normal periods in points of money invested. During the first ten months of the current year some $2,250,000,000, which was twice the amount expended during the same period of 1918, our last normal pre-war year. In point of actual new construction work of all kinds these figures cannot be said to reflect a great amount of increased improvement, as labor and other building costs have increased tremendously since 1918. Furthermore, the demand for space has gained steadily as a result of business expansion and increased population, so that the housing situation the country over is just as acute as it has been at any time, notwithstanding the increased expenditures for new construction."
